M. Saiful Islam : Pursuing Alternative Development: Indigenous People, Ethnic Organization and Agency
before purchasing it in order to gauge whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised Pursuing Alternative Development: Indigenous People, Ethnic Organization and Agency:

Drawing upon ethnographic descriptions of three grassroots ethnic organizations, which work for indigenous peoples in promoting economic livelihood, education and strive for social justice, this book investigates the possibilities and challenges of alternative development.

Anthropologist Islam delivers a succinct, extremely timely text on alternative forms of development. The book itself is rather short, with a healthy balance of academic and lay writing styles that make the text quite accessible to readers interested in community development. Libraries with collections concerning community development, poverty alleviation, and the cultural dimensions of health and sustainability will be best served to have a copy of this title. Summing Up: Highly recommended. Upper-division undergraduates and above. (K. M. Woosnam, Choice, Vol. 53 (10), June, 2016) "This book will definitely enliven the debate about alternative ways of 'development'. The case study presented shows convincingly that underprivileged groups can develop themselves rather than being developed by others. Overall this is a useful text for academics, students and practitioners." - Hans-Dieter Evers, Emeritus Professor of Development Studies, University of Bonn, Germany "This book offers both an anthropological critique of development, and also a pioneering ethnography of unusual indigenous organization working to improve the life conditions of its people. It is a superb ethnography and a well-written text, bearing a powerful moral message." - Gordon Mathews, Professor and Chair of the Department of Anthropology, The Chinese University of Hong Kong, Hong Kong
