Insightful By Francisco Mendez Paints a wholistic understanding on how online businesses develop. Doesn't baby step you (which is the point), but lays the context on which you will pave our way. Based on that the book is 3 stars. The five stars are because of the end. I love the humble and real values explained at the end of the book. While I understand it's a bit of click bait game for the title, I think the underlying values need to be a bit more emphasized. The book carries a bit of a wantrepreneur vibe to it until it hit that last part. I thoroughly believe goals should be pursued from a (mental) place of abundance and not lack, which I initially misunderstood until I hit that last section with Daniel's maxima and mental game insight. Might just have been me, not saying this is the first impression on everyone, but after all this is my personal review and feedback of the book. Great job Daniel, happy to see you succeed for the value you give to people bro. 2 of 2 people found the following review helpful. Most Important Book I Have Ever Read By Sam Topping I have a HUGE library of books—many of which are in the self-development/entrepreneur field. I can honestly say that this has been the most useful and motivating book I have read. As an entrepreneur in his mid 20s (I have my own personal training business), I wish I would have read something like this 5-6 years ago. Being an entrepreneur is not for everyone, but EVERYONE should at least read this book and listen to what Daniel is saying. This is the type of book that could change your whole life. I knew over the past few years that the game is changing with social media, YouTube, and the Internet in general. But I have had no idea about how to take advantage of these things and actually take action on starting some type of online business. Daniel clearly lays out a plan of action that you can get to work on TODAY to control your career and income. If you read this whole book, take notes, and bust your ass following the plan, I would find it hard to believe that you couldn't be successful starting your own business doing something you enjoy.
