It provided me the tools necessary to build a pathway to a career after graduating from UST Law. In addition to landing a job in health care compliance after graduation using my Roadmap, I used it as a foundation for discussion with my supervisor upon my first promotion within the company. With the landscape of employment for recent graduates ever-changing and nerve-racking, this Roadmap was my one-way ticket to full-time employment. Thank you, Professor Hamilton! 2 of 2 people found the following review helpful. Groundbreaking and Transformational! By Customer I used Road Map with my entire 1L class in January 2016 and the students have been ecstatic about the process. I have interviewed each student individually and they consistently comment on how useful these materials were in helping them discover and integrate their passions, motivations, experience, values, competencies, and relationships into a cohesive and intentional plan for employment during and after law school. Even student who thought they knew what they wanted to do after law school found the process meaningful in confirming or changing their direction. The self-awareness and strengths assessments have been highly valued by our students. This year was a pilot program, but based upon the feedback from students and the results of the course, we are building it into our professional formation program at Pepperdine. I recommend Neil's book wholeheartedly and without reservation. By Customer I work with law students on their career and professional development and I find Roadmap to be an incredibly useful resource. The self-assessment exercises and the introduction to the competencies that legal employers look for when they are hiring and evaluating their employees are especially helpful. I used these materials in a career self-assessment program I did with our 1Ls this year and the students found it very helpful. I recommend Roadmap to any law student who wants to take ownership of their career professional development. Eric Bono Assistant Dean, Career Development University of Denver Sturm College of Law

Professor Neil Hamilton, former dean of St. Thomas University School of Law, has developed a ground-breaking template for law students to use throughout all three years of law school in order to be fully prepared to find employment upon graduation. Hamilton established the core competencies desired by law firms, corporate legal departments, and governmental law departments, to demonstrate what competencies each student should be developing. Through a combination of one-to-one mentoring and student-driven growth plans, each student identifies specific competencies and career goals then demonstrates progress over the final five semesters before graduation. Hamilton's method is already in use at several law schools, with spectacular results—both increased employment rates and elevated student understanding of the student's role and path in obtaining employment. This is the book for law students who want to take control of their law school education, and ensure a positive outcome upon graduation.
